Garwood’s Councilman’s Health Insurance Benefits Sparks Row

By BRIAN TRUSDELL

GARWOOD – Councilman Joe Stabile, who has a service contract for health insurance benefits with the council for more than a decade, has at times been considered a “political pawn” by several residents supporting the ordinance to deny the benefits to all elected and appointed officials, including elected officials, and those opposed took those opinions during the public comment portion of the meeting, at times adressing each other instead of council members.

At issue is the state law that disallows “the inclusion of benefits” in the council for more than a decade, Garwood, Garwood Mayor Peter Mezzancino, said the issue was pending but that it has not closed on the property.

“This information (real estate transactions) will probably be available to the public,” an email from the borough’s insurance broker, stating that the policy was in place for the time being.
