

Westfield's Train Station Receives a Much Needed Face Lift

Commuter Information

Trains can transport commuters from Westfield to Penn Station in Newark in as little time as 20 minutes; from Newark, transfers to midtown New York at Penn Station are available by New Jersey Transit and to downtown via Path trains.

Local New Jersey Transit bus routes make several stops in Westfield including Elm Street, just north of East Broad Street, and South Avenue, opposite the railroad station. New York express buses make stops on North Avenue, including one adjacent to the westbound railroad station parking lot.

Train and bus information – routes, schedules and fares – is available by calling the New Jersey Transit Information Center at 1-800-772-2222.
