Spring-like Temps Lead To Baseball Ruminations

By KATE McGEE
Specially Written for The Westfield Leader and The Times

It's January, which only means one thing: football playoffs. Across the nation, Americans regress into couch potato mode to watch hours of football. Yet as the Superbowl quickly approaches, why is the only sport on my mind baseball?

Maybe it was the warm weather of this past weekend, but as I scan the sports section for a glimpse of some baseball news, I can't help but get that rush of excitement for spring training, fresh cut grass and ballpark franks.

This past summer, I became a baseball fan, more specifically, a Mets fan. My father and mother had always been devoted Mets fans, and I always enjoyed going to go the games, but when I saw the chemistry and talent that the 2006 Mets had to offer—specifically between Jose Reyes and David Wright—I was hooked.

I attended my first outing at Shea Stadium when I was two weeks old, so it had always been in my blood. Yet until this summer, it had never infected me.

Previously, I would have never sacrificed an episode of "Law and Order" to catch the latest scores, or fought with my father over the sports section. Yet, this summer was different. I knew how many bases Jose Reyes had stolen, how many home runs Carlos Beltran hit out of the park and constantly compared the Mets' record to other teams in both the National and American leagues.

I argued with Yankee fans about which New York team would make it to the World Series, and taunted them when their team didn't even make it to the American League Championship. I remember watching the Yankees' last game of the season while running on the treadmill at my local gym, as Yankee fans cringed beside me. It was beautiful.

Yet, with the love of the game comes the pain and suffering. The National League Championship series was one of the most stressful weeks of 2006, and when the Mets were unable to clinch in game 7—despite Endy Chavez's amazing catch, I was crushed.

I cried myself to sleep and woke up so distraught that I got into my first fender bender on the way to school (although when I explained my reasoning to my parents, they weren't as accepting). It was the perfect season to become a true Mets fan.

Now, like most Americans, I watch the Superbowl. However, I am more attracted to the event as a whole—the party, the food and the funny commercials—rather than the game itself.

If asked to choose between football and baseball, I would pick baseball in a second. It is a thinking game, where every decision requires deliberation and a distinct thought process.

People who say it is too slow do not understand the game, or its beauty. Non-baseball fans don't realize the precise timing it takes to steal a base, or how hard it is to hit a baseball going 95 miles-per-hour.

As a Mets fan, it's about the rally cap, Mr. Met, the "Meet the Mets" song and the big home run apple that rises out of a top hat after a Met hits a homerun.

Yet, what is most important is the love of the game, that sense of community when you meet another fan of the same team and that joy when your team pulls through for the victory. Author Roger Angell puts it perfectly. He writes in his book, "Once More Around the Park":

"What I do know is that this belonging and caring is what our [baseball] games are all about; this is what we come for…caring deeply and passionately, really caring—which is a capacity or an emotion that has almost gone out of our lives.

"Naiveté—the infantile and ignoble joy that sends a grown man or woman to dancing and shouting with joy in the middle of the night over the haphazardous flight of a distant ball—seems a small price to pay for such a gift."

And as football fans crowd around their TV to see the one, final game that will decide a four month season, I smile, knowing that come April, I will be enjoying not four, but eight months of total baseball bliss.

Kate, from Cranford, is a senior at Mount Saint Mary's
